Ground Rules

What are some ground rules we have established in the past?

- Using “yes AND”
- No interrupting
- Use I statements
- Mutual Respect and support
- Accepting people on their own terms
- Welcoming and inclusive
- Assuming best intent
- No judgement
- Treat everyone equally
- Use people’s preferred pronouns
- Use compassionate language
- Don’t be afraid of asking

What are some ground rules you hope for today and in future conversations?
What is a Brave Space?

Definition

A brave space is a space where folks are comfortable speaking from their own perspective, sharing their experiences, and being comfortable with discomfort. We recognize that talking about privilege and difference can bring up emotions and feelings that take time to process, and we want to use this space to name and explore those sometimes uncomfortable emotions. In a brave space, we do not shy away from those feelings of awkwardness—we ask questions, admit when we don’t know something, and speak from our position. We believe that in questioning why we feel comfortable or uncomfortable and in listening to each other’s individual experiences, we can make our space safer and freer for everyone’s creative expression.

Use this space to free write, if you would like, on what a “brave space” means to you—why it is important and what it might look like for us and our students.
Definition: Holding Space

(Courtesy of Heather Plett, “What it Really Means to Hold Space for Someone”)

“It means that we are willing to walk alongside another person in whatever journey they’re on without judging them, making them feel inadequate, trying to fix them, or trying to impact the outcome. When we hold space for other people, we open our hearts, offer unconditional support, and let go of judgement and control.”

8 Tips to Help You Hold Space for Others

You can use the space between to brainstorm ways we hold space as mentors in our programs.

1. Give people permission to trust their own intuition and wisdom.

2. Give people only as much information as they can handle.

3. Don’t take their power away.

4. Keep your own ego out of it.
5. Make them feel safe enough to fail.

6. Give guidance and help with humility and thoughtfulness.

7. Create a container for complex emotions, fear, trauma, etc.

8. Allow them to make different decisions and to have different experiences than you would.
